

YOUTUBE'S SUPPLEMENTAL SUBMISSION IN RESPONSE TO THE COURT'S REQUEST FOR AN APPENDIX OF EVIDENCE OF KNOWLEDGE OR AWARENESS OF SPECIFIC INFRINGING ACTIVITY

In response to the Court's direction that, along with their summary judgment briefing, the parties submit, in the "form of an appendix, a statement for each clip or work in suit" describing (1) "[w]hat precise information was given to or reasonably apparent to YouTube identifying the location or cite of the infringing matter" and (2) "[w]hat would YouTube have to do in addition[,] to locate and remove the infringing matter disregarding the use of its own non-standard resources . . ." (10/12/12 Hearing Tr. 29:2-15), YouTube respectfully submits the following chart listing each clip-in-suit in one column, and in a second column the evidence Viacom has proffered to prove the required facts listed above for each separate clip-in-suit. To date, Viacom has proffered no such evidence. It now must do so for each of the clips listed in order to survive YouTube's motion for summary judgment with regard to the knowledge element.

Pursuant to the Second Circuit's instructions in this case, Viacom can defeat summary judgment on YouTube's DMCA defense by showing disqualifying knowledge only if Viacom presents evidence that "YouTube had knowledge or awareness of any specific instances of infringement corresponding to the clips-in-suit." Viacom Int'l, Inc. v. YouTube, Inc., 676 F.3d 19, 41 (2d Cir. 2012). The required evidence must relate to the plaintiffs' actual clips-in-suit, because "[b]y definition, only the current clips-in-suit are at issue in this litigation." Id. at 34. Accordingly, as explained in the papers accompanying YouTube's renewed motion for summary judgment, Viacom cannot avoid summary judgment with regard to the knowledge element without proffering evidence for each separate clip-in-suit showing that:

1. A YouTube employee actually viewed the clip on the YouTube service or was otherwise alerted to the existence of the specific clip, its content, and its location on the YouTube service;

2. The YouTube employee recognized the clip as copyrighted content belonging to Viacom (or at least as belonging to someone other than the user who posted the clip to the YouTube service);
3. The YouTube employee believed that the clip was not one of the innumerable clips of Viacom content that had been posted by Viacom or with Viacom's authorization, or posted by a user and deliberately allowed by Viacom to remain on YouTube;
4. The clip, in fact, was not one of the innumerable clips of Viacom content that had been posted by Viacom or with Viacom's authorization, or posted by a user and deliberately allowed by Viacom to remain on YouTube;
5. The YouTube employee did not believe that the clip was a fair use or de minimis use;
6. The clip, in fact, was not a fair use or de minimis use; and
7. YouTube did not then expeditiously remove the clip from the service.
